

Vacancy Management Procedure

Commitment

Ilowra is committed to ensuring vacancy management is efficient and effective. We believe that good vacancy management is important for all stakeholders. A household that is well matched is generally content and stable, which benefits residents, Ilowra Specialist Disability Accommodation (SDA) and the Supported Independent Living (SIL) provider.

Scope

This procedure is to ensure vacancy management in Ilowra SDA:

- complies with legislation, policy and related requirements
- is equitable, consistent and transparent
- maximises choice and control
- engages with residents, their representatives and the SIL provider
- considers household compatibility, resident safety and sustainable living arrangements
- occurs within funding timeframes.

Ilowra developed customised SDA. When SDA is purpose built for a person it is exempt from vacancy management requirements with the exception of eligibility, screening and collaboration.

Ilowra acknowledges participants and SIL providers are also stakeholders in the vacancy management process. Communication channels and clear roles will be outlined in writing, and may be specific in response to individual requirements. The participant and collaboration agreements will provide specific detail to support this policy and resident choice.

A vacancy is not considered filled from the service agreement or residential statement commencement date. Under the National Disability Insurance Scheme (NDIS) rules, Ilowra is provided SDA funding for 90 days to fill a vacancy for a dwelling that is enrolled to house four or five people, and 60 days SDA funding to fill a vacancy for a dwelling enrolled for two or three people. There is no funded time to fill a vacancy in a dwelling enrolled for one person. This procedure is designed to fit within the funding timelines whenever possible.

What is vacancy management?

Vacancy management covers:

- identifying a vacancy in SDA
- advertising the vacancy
- showing the home to people who are interested and eligible
- taking and shortlisting applications
- selecting the most appropriate person to fill the vacancy
- offering the vacancy
- notifying successful/unsuccessful applicants
- informing stakeholders and NDIA
- transition a new person moving into the house.

Procedure

Agreements

Illowra develops customised SDA in partnership with participants and their families, starting from the planning stage. This means that a group of people may have come together to design and develop an SDA dwelling they have equity in, with people who they want to live with, supported by an investor agreement. Many of the vacancies could be filled at the planning stage.

Vacancy management will have a common approach, in line with compliance requirements, but some detail may differ. This is because:

- Choice and control means different things to different people
- New houses are different to established households
- There may be NDIS and State requirements.

Participant agreements will specify how residents would like to be involved in vacancy management in their home. This includes, but is not limited to:

- Who has the resident chosen as their SIL*?
- Do they want a review period for the SIL provider, so if they change their mind, or if the household changes, they have choice and control to change the SIL?
- Do they want everyone to agree to the same SIL, or will they agree to accommodate multiple SIL providers?
- Do they want to be consulted directly on vacancy management or do they want to be represented by family or the SIL?
- Do they want to meet applicants prior to offer?

(In Victoria currently DHHS requires the SIL manage vacancies, as the registered Disability Provider. Illowra will work with participants and/or their families to establish SDA, and Vacancy Management will be agreed with the SIL in the collaboration agreement.)

Illowra will develop collaboration agreements with SIL providers based on legislative requirements and participant choice. Each SDA-SIL collaboration agreement will be designed to meet compliance requirements, establish an effective working relationship and result in positive outcomes for participants in line with service agreements. For vacancy management this includes, but is not limited to:

- support for participant involvement
- the SIL provider's role in vacancy management
- requirements for open house.

To ensure choice and control is embedded in the process, specific details relating to vacancy management from each household's service agreements and collaboration agreement/s will be entered into the Illowra information system by the organisation's signatory or their delegate within five business days. If these details change, they will be updated by Illowra signatory or their delegate within five business days.

Identifying a vacancy in SDA

There may be a vacancy may if a:

- new dwelling is enrolled with the National Disability Insurance Agency (NDIA)
- resident chooses to move out

- notice to vacate has been issued
- resident passes away.

Under the Terms of Business for Registered Providers, Illowra is required to notify the NDIA within five business days if:

- the participant gives notice to vacate
- a notice to vacate has been issued
- there is an impending vacancy for any other reason.

In Victoria, under the Disability Act, the SIL provider is required to notify the Secretary within 24 hours of a vacancy.

There are different ways of identifying a vacancy, depending on the property and reason for vacancy:

- In new SDA developments, vacancies will be identified by Illowra.
- In existing SDA, there will be clauses in participant agreements outlining who residents notify and when if they are planning to leave a property.
- Collaboration agreements with the SIL will be based on participant agreements. The SIL may be required to notify of the vacancy as the resident’s representative, or if a resident passes away. They will also be required to confirm general details regarding the vacancy with Illowra.

In some circumstances, a vacancy may be advertised prior to a resident exiting. In this case, advertising cannot start until the resident, SDA and SIL providers have agreed to an exit date. This is to prevent unintended pressures on the resident to exit earlier than the agreed date.

The following table outlines vacancy notification requirements.

Advertising the vacancy

The vacancy manager, in consultation with stakeholders and in line with agreements, should ensure participants have sufficient information to determine whether to apply. This includes:

- the SDA type (design category and building type)
- features of the house
- the general location of the SDA including proximity to amenities such as public transport
- basic and de-identified information about any existing residents, such as gender and age mix
- a description of the application process such as key dates, open inspection times and application process
- specialist support features.

All vacancies must be advertised for at least ten business days through the NDIS register, websites and local networks. This allows time for eligible participants to find out about the property, visit if they choose, and apply for the vacancy.

The following table outlines vacancy advertising requirements.

Task	Responsible party	Timeframe (business day)	Required systems, tools and templates

Open inspections

Open inspections offer a valuable opportunity for potential residents to view the residence and find out more about the vacancy. They require coordination with stakeholders. For vacant SDA this will be with the property manager. For established SDA the vacancy manager will consult with the SIL and/or residents to ensure the advertised dates provide reasonable notice and minimise disruptions to all stakeholders.

When responding to expressions of interest in an open house, the vacancy manager will collect the person's details, including age, NDIS participant number and plan/funding status, and notes who will be attending the inspection.

If applicants are not eligible for the vacancy they will be referred on. If NDIS participants do not have SDA as a provisional item in their approved plan, the vacancy manager will inform them (or support coordinators/Local Area Coordinators - LAC) about the need to arrange a plan review. People aged 65 years will be referred to My Aged care.

Names will be provided to the housing officer (new SDA) or SIL and/or residents (established SDA). Illowra will facilitate open inspections for new vacant dwellings, ensuring site security and visitor safety are maintained.

The SIL will oversee coordinate open inspections for occupied dwellings, unless otherwise negotiated in the collaboration agreement. Residents will be involved in open inspections in line with their preferences documented in the service agreement. The SIL will ensure only shared areas and the vacant room are accessed. They will maintain the privacy of all residents. If the resident has not vacated, they will agree an approach for showing the room. The SIL will also ensure the inspection does not cause any security or safety problems.

The following table outlines open inspection requirements.

Applications

The NDIA is responsible for assessing SDA eligibility. The vacancy manager will check that applicants are approved for SDA, the vacancy's SDA type (design category and building type) and location. They will collate the information for comparison and selection. In the event of no applications wider advertising would need to commence as soon as possible.

Selecting the most appropriate person to fill the vacancy

Stakeholders are required to work together to identify a preferred participant to offer SDA, as outlined in the service and collaboration agreement. This may include communicating with each other and sharing information about the existing residents and the services. They will fully co-operate to meet the needs of the residents of the household, and balancing the needs of existing and new residents.

The selection process to determine the best fit for the household will vary depending on the vacancy:

- The vacancy manager will review all initial applications for new vacant SDA, as there may be no other stakeholders.
- Where participants and/or their families are SDA investors, the new SDA development is partially allocated, and a SIL has not been confirmed, the vacancy manager will work with founding stakeholders as outlined in the investor and service agreements.
- For established SDA, the vacancy manager will work with residents, their representatives and/or the SIL provider as outlined in the participant and collaborative agreements.

Apart from the first instance, a meeting will be held at an agreed suitable time and follow a clear and consistent agenda. (In the first case of a vacant SDA with no stakeholders, the vacancy manager would follow a clear and documented selection process.) The vacancy manager will be briefed vacancy meeting attendees on confidentiality and due process. The vacancy manager will chair the meeting and document outcomes. Depending on resident choice as noted in the service agreement, and the collaboration agreement(s):

- If residents or their representative choose to contribute to the selection process verbally or writing, individually or collectively, this input will be brought to the vacancy meeting.
- If they wish to participate in the vacancy meeting, or have a representative participate, this will be facilitated.
- If there is one or more SIL providers involved they will automatically be involved as a stakeholder. If residents have agreed the SIL as their representative in the participant agreement, this will be accommodated in the process as would the process for the SIL seeking resident views (eg through a house meeting).

The vacancy manager (new SDA), or all stakeholders (established SDA) will work through the applications systemically and fairly, must consider individual factors that may influence the likelihood of a sustainable and long term tenancy. Consideration will be given to household compatibility, resident safety and sustainable living arrangements, to determine the most suitable person.

All parties are required to collaborate with each other at the meeting and agree on the preference and ranking. Ideally everyone will be in consensus. If there are any complexities while identifying a suitable participant, the stakeholders may give this further consideration outside of the meeting. This is to be completed within two days for the top three ranked applicants, to avoid further delays. If there is agreement no one applicant is suitable then wider advertising would need commence as soon as possible. If consensus is unable to be reached after further consideration and discussion the SDA may make a final decision on ranking of vacancies to be offered to participants. Difference of opinion will be considered; if necessary a majority decision may be made.

Meeting minutes will include the decisions making process and a clear rationale for the vacancy to be offered to a particular applicant. Decision making documents must be retained on file in the Illowra document management system. Documentation will be available to demonstrate due care, skill and diligence when offering a participant SDA.

The following table outlines selection requirements.

Offering the vacancy

The vacancy manager will draft the offer letter. They will confirm and include any conditions required by residents and/or the SIL provider, such as funding approval. The offer is subject to agreements between the participant, the SDA and the SIL provider of their choice (new SDA) or the household’s SIL provider (established SDA unless they accommodate multiple SIL providers). They will speak with the participant or their representative, and send the letter of offer with the acceptance form.

If the offer is accepted, the vacancy manager moves on to the next stage of the vacancy management procedure. If the offer is declined, the vacancy manager will continue to offer to applicants in order of priority until someone accepts, or they reach there are no suitable applicants. In that case wider advertising would need to commence as soon as possible.

The following table outlines offering the vacancy requirements.

Informing stakeholders and NDIA

The vacancy manager will keep residents, or their representatives, and/or the SIL provider, informed of the outcomes. They will advise NDIA when an offer has been accepted and filled. A participant is considered to be residing in the dwelling from the commencement date of the service agreement.

On confirmation of moving in the vacancy manager will notify any unsuccessful participants and their supports, of the outcome of their application and document accordingly.

Moving in

The future resident will sign a service agreement with Illowra and the SIL provider of their choice (new SDA), or the household's SIL provider (established SDA unless they accommodate multiple SIL providers). The vacancy manager will check the person's preferences for involvement in future vacancy management and related representation, and ensure this is included in the agreement.

The service commencement date must be clearly specified in the agreement. It should be within 60-90 days of vacancy period, so providers will not carry an unfunded vacancy period and be financially disadvantaged.

Illowra will ensure the access requirements of future resident is managed, eg keys/codes. The SIL provider will work with the future resident, and/or their representative, to ensure their transition support requirements are met.

The following table outlines offering the requirements that enable the new resident to move in.

Open Inspection Tip sheet

This tip sheet has been developed to help host an open inspection. The tip sheet includes tasks to complete before and during the open inspection, and important information to provide to attendees and their supports. The following actions say 'staff', but residents may participate in sharing information or showing the house if they choose.

Only people on the attendee list and their supports may enter the property for the open inspection. Attendees cannot enter the bedroom of a person who lives in the house without their permission. Attendees can only enter a bedroom where it is vacant (unless otherwise agreed for room that is yet to be vacated) and any common areas (both inside and out). Staff should minimise disruptions to existing residents where possible, for example scheduling the open inspection at a time established residents find suitable. This may be when they are home, out or engaged in other activities. Staff should also attend to the safety and security considerations of both the existing residents and attendees throughout the open inspection.

Before open inspection

- Staff should read the marketing flyer and familiarise themselves with its content. Seek clarification if unsure about anything on the flyer
- Staff should have enough copies of the marketing flyer available to provide to attendees
- Staff should use the attendee list provided by the divisional vacancy manager to manage the open inspection
- Staff should ensure that all rooms of existing residents are closed for privacy unless otherwise agreed
- Staff should be mindful of identifying material displayed such as resident names on bedroom doors, photos, and resident information on display in the office and around the house

During open Inspection

- Staff should document who attends and return to vacancy manager after the open house with any related feedback
- Staff should provide a copy of the marketing flyer to each attendee
- Staff should provide each attendee with a quick overview of the house including home technology, accessibility and proximity to local amenities
- Staff should monitor attendees to ensure privacy, safety and security

- Staff should answer any vacancy and support queries from attendees during the open inspection
- Staff are not to provide personal information about existing residents to attendees. If attendees ask any questions about current residents, staff should refer them to the advertisement flyer.
- If current residents are home and would like to meet attendees and introduce themselves, or participate in showing the house, staff should assist.

Information to provide to attendees and their supports during open inspection

- The specific 'house rules' e.g. keeping pets, sharing resources and household items, having visitors over to the house, staying overnight or coming for meals, smoking etc
- Monthly rent or board and lodging information, including any additional contributions residents are required to make for expenses such as utilities or other services
- What residents are expected to supply themselves i.e. their own bedding, linen and bedroom furniture including mattresses and beds
- The agreement (and residential statement in Victoria) needs to be signed and they need to start paying rent as per SDA Rules
- Access to a vehicle, whether it is wheelchair accessible (does it have a hoist and anchor points)? Is the vehicle shared? Any other restrictions or considerations with use of the vehicle?

Screening tips

Screening, in vacancy management, is a way of looking at a person, their interests, abilities and support needs, and how this matches the vacancy. It is important to screen applicants in the selection process. Structured screening makes it easier to prioritise applicants, looking at who is the best match for the house and the household. (For new dwellings, applicants' support needs should be considered against the housing type, and if it is to be a shared dwelling, likely future residents.)

Screening looks at information about people that would otherwise be private or confidential. No one is allowed to talk about or share information about applicants to anyone other than the vacancy panel.

Some things to consider are outlined below. A match in one area does not guarantee compatibility. ie two people may be the same age or gender, but not get along. Good profiles assist in comparing applicants to find who will fit in well with current residents.

Age and interests

People of the same age and stage in life are more likely to share similar interests. For some people, their age does not represent their ability. There may be two people with a common interest, and similar abilities, but of very different ages.

Age-related life changes occur for all people, including people with a disability. People of a similar age may be having similar life experiences.

Is the applicant a similar age to existing residents?

Are they interested in any of the same things as existing residents?

Do they like to share their interests?

Are they going through some of the same life experiences as existing residents?

Gender and sexuality

People may prefer to live with others of the same gender, ie ladies may want to live with ladies and men with men. Sometimes a mixed household is a good balance.

People may also identify as a gender different to how they were born, with both genders or no gender. People may wish to change their gender. This can be called gender diversity. Some people accept this, others may not be as understanding. Screening should look at the best match, but should not discriminate on gender.

Some people are sexual and some people are not. Some people like people of the opposite sex, the same sex or both. Some people accept this, others may not be as understanding. Sexuality is private and people may not want to share this information. Screening should look at the best match, but should not discriminate on sexuality.

Do current residents want to live with a lady, man or is this not important to them?

Are there any cultural or safety reasons for choosing an applicant of one gender?

If a current resident or applicant is gender diverse, how will this be accepted?

If known, is there anything about the current residents' or applicants' sexuality that may affect how people would get along?

Cultural and religious background

Where a person comes from, and what they believe, can affect how they like to live. This can be what they eat, their daily routines, their community, whether they can be with people of a different gender, and even the holidays they celebrate. For some people it is very important, and for others it is not. People may need support in line with their cultural or religious identity. People may not always share this information. Screening should look at the best match, but should not discriminate on culture or religion.

What are the cultural and religious similarities and differences?

Are these important to current residents or applicants?

Would staff be able to support everybody's cultural or religious needs?

Community

How a person wants to participate in their community can affect the support they need.

How is the person engaged with local service providers and how does this fit in with others in the house?

Will staff be able to support everyone's community activities?

Support needs

People with the same disability or similar support needs will not always get along. However, matching the person's support needs to the house type and support available is important.

Health needs should also be considered to make sure that staff, in consultation with specialists, can meet the needs of the applicants.

What are the similarities and differences with support needs? (eg personal support, self-management, activities of daily living, mobility etc.)

Would staff be able to support everybody's support needs?

Would there need to be any house modifications or equipment to meet the applicant's support needs?

If there are any safety concerns, could they be managed by staff in the home?

Communication skills

Some people like to communicate and be around others; some people prefer a quieter life. Being able to communicate with other people in your home is important for independence and enjoyment.

Do people like being around other people or do they prefer their own company?

What are the similarities and differences in how people communicate?

Would staff be able to support everybody's support needs?

Would there need to be any house modifications or technology to meet the applicant's communication needs?

Behaviours of concern

Behaviours of concern refers to any behaviour that causes harm to the person or another person. Screening should look at the best match, but should not discriminate on support needs such as behaviours of concern. Evidence suggests having people with a disability with behaviours of concern living together can overwhelm staff and affect the support they are able to provide.

If current residents or applicants have known behaviours of concern, would staff be able to manage the behaviours as well as everyone's support needs?

Will current management plans work in the house with the resident mix?

Can behaviours be managed safely?

What will be the risks and how can they be managed?

Are known triggers for the behaviour that may be managed better or not as well in the house with the resident mix?

Would there need to be any house modifications or equipment to meet the applicant's behaviour support needs?
